A half hour walla-walla ride past a Western skyline mixed with sampans, the Star Ferry, junks and things of the East. Hong Kong—filled with hours of liberty, food, shopping, women, clothes, and just fun. A long way from home on Christmas, but a fabulous stop that marked the beginning of the home stretch.

High pitched whining of blowers
Roaring of large hot gears Valves clapping open and shut Others letting steam squeek by Large shafts spinning with a dull roar
the high speed splash of pumps Decks vibrating and rolling beneath his feet
Heat, humidity, and boredom
Look at a gage, turn a valve
Turn a valve, look at a gage Water all about him, and more water swirling below his soles
A casualty! Look out!
Grab a wrench!
Get a bigger hammer!
Turn that valve!
The efforts of spent energy pouring off his brow Restored. Relax. Collapse.
A challenge to all, it is.
Some by choice, some by force,
some by consolation
Amazingly efficient
through all the inefficiency
Every day, every year,
every minute, every hour
May the engineer see the gates of heaven
For he has been through the gates of hell.

ARRIVAL
30 March 1971

Hong Kong: the lights of the city seen from the heights of Victoria Peak were wonders shared;
The short days are gone
when we shuttled across the bay to liberty nights in Hong Kong.

Olongapo: the sounds told you this was a different world.
"Change your money here!" came the cry;
and you did — dollars to pesos —
and a night on the town in the shops or the bars
(a girl for your lap)
"Hi, sailor, buy me drink?"
and on all evening through.

Taipei: a city full of night and lonliness too.
With friends to shop and store
then lunch — later stopped for a drink or two
the night was morning before we knew.

Homebound we go to Long Beach and leave; Home to those we love deep to homecooked meals
and old friends and sleep.
